Community Web App

for HackerStash

HackerStash was a community-led tournament where founders shared tips and advice, as well as money, to help each other succeed. I was responsible for designing, validating, project managing and running the company with two co-founders.

We've just launched our free tier 😊

 Codefree update by  Chris

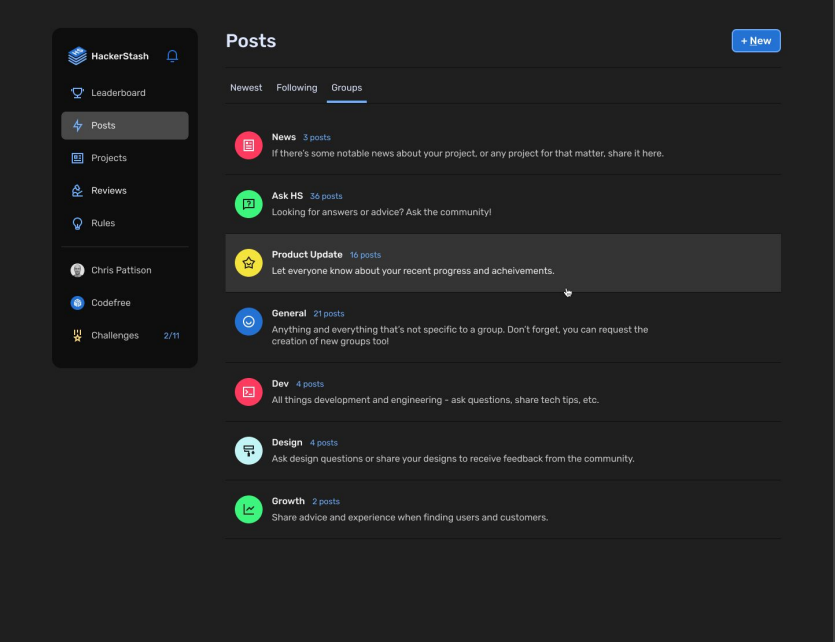

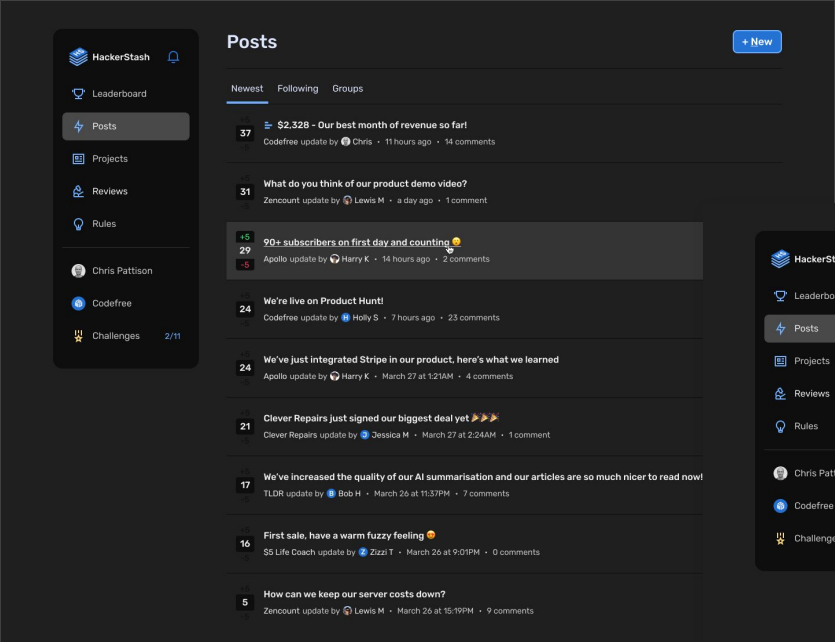

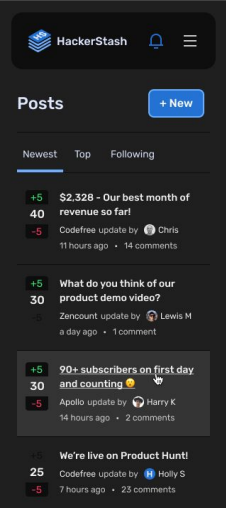

After surveying our customers we've decided to offer a free tier for Codefree. It's hopefully going to reduce friction for those considering testing our product, but it's also a really great offering regardless.

The free plan includes all the standard features of the paid plans, with the following differences:

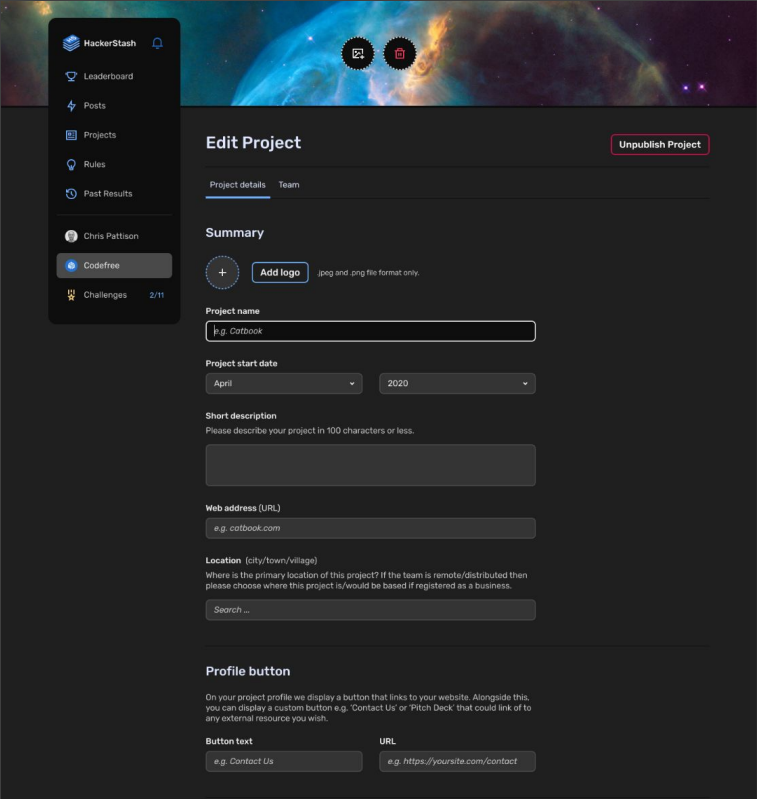

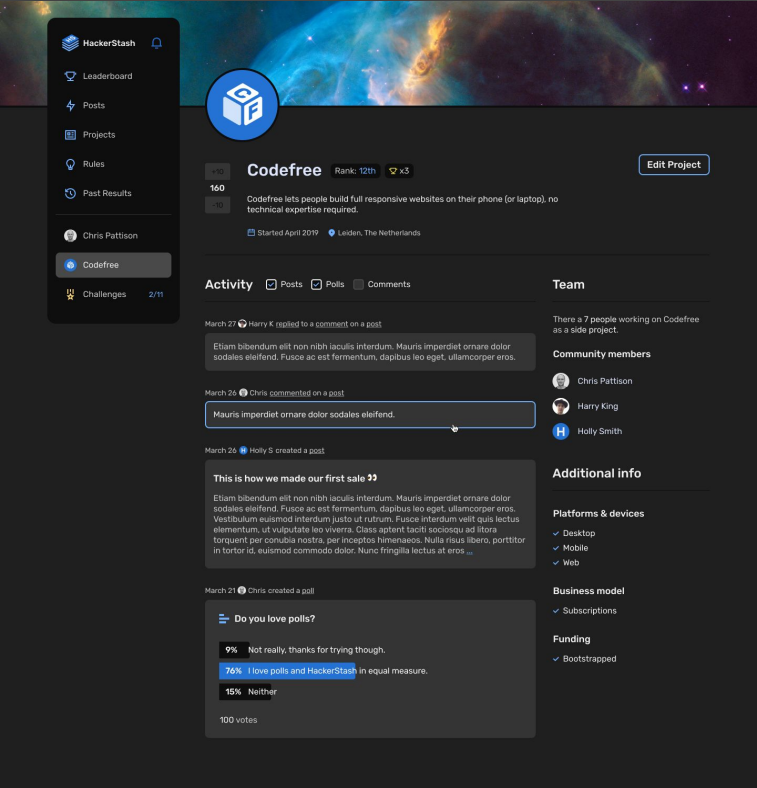

- User can only have 5 pages on their website
- They can only publish to a codefree subdomain
- They receive email and helpdesk support, but no live chat.

Thanks to @lemonis for the input from our earlier pricing question.

Cash out

Your stash is a wallet for your project's tournament winnings. Each time you win a prize it will be added to your stash and it's available to cash out at any time.

Tips

- Think of a purchase that would best help drive your project forward and make that your cash out goal - it will keep motivated and focused on building a stash that you'll spend wisely.
- If you've won a prize, make sure you thank your fellow community member! They wanted you to win, and will love hearing how you plan to use your winnings to support your business.
- Winning prizes is a great perk, but it won't happen every week. The HackerStash community survives and thrives by putting people first, prizes second.
